Divorce in Nevada

Who can get divorced in Nevada?

Any married person who has been a resident and physically present in Nevada for a period of six weeks and has the intention of remaining in Nevada indefinitely. "Indefinitely" means that at the time of filing for divorce, the person filing for divorce has no immediate plans to move out of Nevada. You must also provide a witness who lives in Nevada who can testify in person or sign an affidavit that, based upon his or her personal knowledge, you have lived in Nevada for at least six weeks. For child custody issues to be decided, the child must have lived in Nevada for six months prior to the filing of the divorce case.

What are the grounds for divorce in Nevada?

- The parties are "incompatible"; or
- Insanity for two years prior to the action; or
- Spouses living separate and apart for more than one year.
- Note: it is not necessary to make or prove allegations of adultery, mental cruelty, etc., to obtain a divorce in Nevada.
